

LANGUAGE AND SPEECH

Xaliljanova Madinabonu Odiljon qizi

English Language Teacher at № 2 Technicum of Yangiqo'rg'on Annotation: This article examines the concepts of language and speech, their differences, functions, importance in communication, and their role in education and society.

Key words: language, speech, communication, linguistics, society, education, culture.

Introduction

Language is a system of symbols used by people to communicate ideas, emotions, and knowledge. Speech is the practical use of language in everyday communication. Language preserves culture, while speech allows people to express thoughts in real situations. Language is a system of symbols used by people to communicate ideas, emotions, and knowledge. Speech is the practical use of language in everyday communication. Language preserves culture, while speech allows people to express thoughts in real situations. Language is a system of symbols used by people to communicate ideas, emotions, and knowledge. Speech is the practical use of language in everyday communication. Language preserves culture, while speech allows people to express thoughts in real situations.

Main Part

Definition of Language

Language is a structured system of words, grammar, and sounds shared by a community. It develops over time and reflects culture and identity. Language is a structured system of words, grammar, and sounds shared by a community. It develops over time and reflects culture and identity. Language is a structured system of words, grammar, and sounds shared by a community. It develops over time and reflects culture and identity. Language is a structured system of words, grammar, and sounds shared by a community. It develops over time and reflects culture and identity.

Definition of Speech

Speech is the spoken realization of language. It varies according to context, speaker, and purpose. Effective speech requires vocabulary, pronunciation, fluency, and confidence. Speech is the spoken realization of language. It varies according to context, speaker, and purpose. Effective speech requires vocabulary, pronunciation, fluency, and confidence. Speech is the spoken realization of language. It varies according to context, speaker, and purpose. Effective speech requires vocabulary, pronunciation, fluency, and confidence. Speech is the spoken realization of language. It varies according to context, speaker, and purpose. Effective speech requires vocabulary, pronunciation, fluency, and confidence.

Differences

Language is a social system; speech is an individual act. Language is relatively stable, whereas speech changes depending on the speaker and situation. Language is a social system; speech is an individual act. Language is relatively stable, whereas speech changes depending on the speaker and situation. Language is a social system; speech is an individual act. Language is relatively stable, whereas speech changes depending on the speaker and situation. Language is a social system; speech is an individual act. Language is relatively stable, whereas speech changes depending on the speaker and situation.

Importance

Language and speech are essential in education, business, science, technology, and international communication. Good communication improves cooperation, learning, and professional success. Language and speech are essential in education, business, science, technology, and international communication. Good communication improves cooperation, learning, and professional success. Language and speech are essential in education, business, science, technology, and international communication. Good communication improves cooperation, learning, and professional success. Language and speech are essential in education, business, science, technology, and international communication. Good communication improves cooperation, learning, and professional success. Language and speech are essential in education, business, science, technology, and international communication. Good communication improves cooperation, learning, and professional success. Language and speech are essential in education, business, science, technology, and international communication. Good communication improves cooperation, learning, and professional success.

Conclusion of Discussion

Modern society requires strong language and speech skills. English has become an international language, making effective communication increasingly valuable. Modern society requires strong language and speech skills. English has become an international language, making effective communication increasingly valuable.

Modern society requires strong language and speech skills. English has become an international language, making effective communication increasingly valuable.

Conclusion

Language and speech are closely connected but different concepts. Language provides the system of communication, while speech is its practical application. Developing both language knowledge and speaking skills helps individuals succeed academically, professionally, and socially.

References

1. Saussure, F. (1983). Course in General Linguistics.
2. Lyons, J. (1981). Language and Linguistics.
3. Yule, G. (2020). The Study of Language.
4. Crystal, D. (2003). English as a Global Language.
5. Fromkin, V., Rodman, R., & Hyams, N. (2018). An Introduction to Language.
6. Richards, J. C., & Schmidt, R. Longman Dictionary of Language Teaching.
7. Oxford Advanced Learner's Dictionary.
8. Halliday, M. A. K. An Introduction to Functional Grammar.
9. Brown, H. D. Principles of Language Learning and Teaching.
10. Harmer, J. The Practice of English Language Teaching.